Make SAFETY FIRST at Work, Travel & Play

SAFETY

4-H club safety projects can emphasize the importance of using safe procedures during work, travel and play. Start with your own club members and work toward making the general public more safety-conscious. Submit a report this fall for consideration as one of the top ten club safety projects.

Kansas Farm Bureau awards the top club a trip to Kansas 4-H Congress for eight 4-H members and two leaders. The next nine clubs win $35 for the club's treasury and a scholarship to the Farm Bureau Youth Safety Seminar next summer. The 4-H members who go to the Safety Seminar must be 14 or 15 by June 1, 1984.

Someone at your county Extension office can tell you how to enter and can give you safety information. The Kansas Farm Bureau Safety Division has films, brochures and project ideas to get you started.

Improving the parent-teen relationship

by Michael J. Martin
Extension Specialist, Human Development

The teenage years can be a time of challenge for both parents and teenagers. It is a time of rapid change — in parent-child relationships, in the teenager's physical and emotional maturity, and in the teenager's attitude toward the world outside of the family. It is also a time when parents learn to let go of a child who has been their responsibility for so long, and allow the teenager to become an independent (although perhaps imperfect) adult.

In spite of the tremendous physical, emotional, and social changes that teenagers experience, most young people cope very well and their values and attitudes surprisingly end up being compatible with those of their parents. The following suggestions will help parents of teenagers cope with some of the problems of parenting a teenager:

Be positive: Try to remember that teenagers are experiencing many aspects of the adult world for the first time and this rapid change can produce high levels of stress. Emphasize their positive behavior with praise, rather than dwelling on things they have done badly (or forgotten to do altogether). They get enough negative input from peers and others outside the family unit.

Be honest. Teenagers are concerned with principles and consistency; they can usually see through dishonesty in adults and are severely critical of such hypocrisy.

Be open. Teenagers need assurance that adults share their problems and concerns. Parents must be willing not just to offer advice but to discuss their own difficulties with, and responses to, complicated and confusing issues.

Set clear and consistent limits. Adults should explain standards of behavior and be somewhat flexible about rules; at the same time, they should make clear what is not open to negotiation.

Although most young people make it through the teenage years with relatively minor crises, some teens may become more and more depressed. Some teens suffering from depression will mope around, lifeless, discouraged and down-in-the-dumps. They may act in a lazy manner not wanting to do anything.

Other depressed teens may act out their depression. Symptoms of depression may include involvement in crime, sexual promiscuity or drug and alcohol (ab)use.

When the teenager's self-esteem hits low levels, life may seem worthless, and not worth living. For an increasing number of teenagers, despair sets in and

We're proud, surprised and "goose-bumpy" thrilled

by Sara Cleland Gilliland

This is a strange experience. As usual, I'm writing the Kansas 4-H Family of the Year announcement. But this year, the award's going to my family, the Clelands of Douglas County.

It's an honor you never think about winning. After all, it's a little different from raising a steer and measuring up in your mind every day whether it will be the fair's grand champion.

I suspect the most meaningful part of the award for us will turn out to be the fact that our friends in the Vinland Valley 4-H Club, who nominated us, thought we had given as much to 4-H as it's given to us.

We were really surprised and a little embarrassed, but overall, being the year's award-winning 4-H family in Kansas is an honest-to-goodness, purple-ribbon-feeling, grand champion thrill.

We four Cleland kids would have to say this honor really is for Mom and Dad, Nora and Miles Cleland. We kids have each spent 10 or more years in 4-H, but Dad's compiled 44 years of service in 4-H and Extension. Forty years have rolled by for Mom. For both of them, nine of those years were spent as community leaders for the Vinland Valley 4-H Club.

As a teenager Dad was a member of the Bellview 4-H Club in Douglas County. He also farmed with his dad, helped his mom operate a pear orchard and made time for running. He won the Kansas high school mile race in 1936.

Mom belonged to the Jolly Juniors and Sedan Be Square 4-H Clubs in Chautauqua County. She was the first girl in Kansas to win a county championship in the swine project.

And it rubbed off on us to really get involved in school, church, 4-H and community activities.

From the time my husband, Don Gilliland, met the Cleland family nearly eight years ago he's been introduced to 4-H style reviews, 4-H tours, cattle shows and county and state fairs. We've even convinced him to become Riley County's 4-H electric leader.

Dad's the easy-going type, but determined ... even downright stubborn at times. He'd spend hours coaching us as we practiced talks and demonstrations, even though his schedule also included Extension board, school board, and rural water district meetings. He bravely ate the results of our many foods demonstrations. Mom usually took us to the contests, because Dad was farming. But my sister Linda remembers that everytime we returned from a contest,

Dad somehow conveniently would be working near the house. Even before we could get out of the car, he'd be casually sauntering over with a grin on his face. And his first comment would be "Well, did you blast 'em out of the water?"

Mom is a little more obvious. When she wanted you to do something, she made it plain. When she was mad at you, you knew it. And when she was proud of you, she told you. Then in the next breath she mentioned a bigger goal.

Even kids all over the county knew that Mom had high expectations. She is like a teacher who constantly challenges you. She constantly challenges herself, too.

Besides working full time as an editor for the University of Kansas, she is a grant project director. She's known as one of the 4-H people to call if your kids need a ride to some event or if you have a question about rules, dates or other details. She has a bad habit of being late, because she's always trying to squeeze in one more thing before she leaves.

Mom was always tolerant of our harebrained ideas. It didn't matter that our family probably would never serve flaming apricot crepes for dessert. If that's what Anita wanted to make for her 4-H demonstration, then Mom bought a crepe pan and we were in the crepe business.

I think we all had some appreciation at the time for the many sacrifices Mom and Dad made, in terms of time and money, that allowed us to succeed. Our appreciation grows as we mature.

There's a certain similarity among all the Cleland kids. We tease each other about our big teeth and similar expressions. Each of us excelled, however, in a different area.

Of the four, Linda is probably the most independent. One of her best qualities is her leadership capability — much of which was developed in 4-H and high school.

She credits 4-H with teaching her to cope with competition. That was beneficial as she became a top student in landscape architecture at Kansas State University. She graduated in May. She's the first to admit that competition is not always pleasant, but that 4-H competition taught her to try her hardest to win and then to pick herself up when she lost.

Anita got the extra dose of charm in our family. She is sincere and caring. When it comes to people skills, she's got them. She says the highlight of 4-H for her was when younger 4-Hers would come up and ask for her help and opinions.

Anita found public speaking was useful not only for learning to talk in front of groups but also for working with individuals. She explains that the ability to organize her thoughts and to express herself helps in teaching situations.

Anita just completed her sophomore year at the University of Kansas, where she is studying visual communications.

Ross's life has not been easy — having three older sisters was the first strike against him! In addition, sometimes we have to believe that if anything can possibly go wrong, it will happen to Ross. For example, after he won a purple ribbon for an experimental technique photograph at last year's county fair, someone stole the photograph. So, he had to spend an extra couple of days in the darkroom getting another print just right.

He's a hard worker and has been recognized for his 4-H work in forestry, photography, leadership, home environment and livestock judging. This fall he'll be the third Cleland kid to attend K-State. He is interested in agriculture and veterinary medicine.

Our accomplishments in 4-H were our own work, but many of them would have never happened without Mom and Dad's encouragement (and, at times, their demands).

They really practiced what they preached to other parents about watching for the fine line between supporting a 4-H member and doing the project for him or her. Dad's always said that 4-H depends on many good leaders but that in most cases the parent is still the best teacher.

We went through the bad moments that many 4-H families experience when the pressure is great, the task seems impossible, there are a thousand other things you'd rather be doing and you'd love to quit. I can hear Mom or Dad saying, "Well, it's OK with me if you don't want to join next year, but don't YOU think you should finish what you started?"

Looking back, we all agree on some things that we have gained from 4-H, even though our interests and abilities were varied.

One of the most satisfying things is seeing the personal growth of others. Dad mentions seeing a kid who was afraid of a calf turn into a competent, professional showman.

One of Mom's favorite stories is about Russell Lawrence, a young member of the Vinland 4-H club. Russell had high expectations for his first year in 4-H, but things didn't go too well. However, he joined again.

That second year on the day of the county fair beef show, Mom had to work so she didn't get to the cattle barns until late in the evening. But Russell was waiting for her.

"Mrs. Cleland, Mrs. Cleland, I've got something to show you," he said excitedly. He hurried his dad off the showbox, opened it up and pulled out a small (probably gold-tone plastic) trophy.

He was so proud of it. "I was talking to him about what he'd won and complimenting him. Then he said, 'But, I thought it (the trophy) would be real gold!'" Mom remembers.

We've had the joy of seeing how 4-H makes a lasting difference in many members' lives. I'm a good example of that. After 10 years as "Freda 4-Her" (as I used to refer to myself), I was convinced I wanted to make 4-H a part of my career. Mom can think of other 4-Hers who've had their first exposure to photography, vet science, livestock and agriculture through 4-H and now are working in those areas.

All four Cleland kids credit 4-H with improving our public speaking ability. We gained a lot of confidence and poise. We also learned to think on our feet when the pressure was greatest — such as the time the can of refrigerated biscuits exploded during my 4-H demonstration or when Anita caught the paper towels on fire, instead of the flaming crepes, during her state fair demonstration.

Each having been club president and county 4-H council president at one time not only helped develop our extemporaneous speaking ability but also taught us something about leadership.

Our family was never big on taking family vacations. Part of the reason may have been we had too many 4-H commitments, but another reason was the farming and chores.

Therefore, 4-H trips were really meaningful to us. Anita speaks for all of us when she explains she's been to four other states and all of them were part of 4-H trips.

Each of us had our first experience on a commercial airliner when we went to Washington, D.C. for the 4-H Citizenship Short Course. Douglas County is unique in that six 4-Hers, accompanied by chaperones, are selected for this honor each summer. Mom and Dad were trip chaperones in 1977. Despite the fact that the film never advanced through the camera while they were there, they had a terrific time.

Two Clelands participated in interstate 4-H exchanges. Ten years after Linda's visit to Haywood County, North Carolina she remembers tobacco juice-spitting contests and clog dancing. Anita participated in an exchange with 4-Hers from Wisconsin and three girls became members of our family for a week.

Winning a state foods award gave me the chance to go to Minneapolis, Minnesota. Anita attended National 4-H Congress in Chicago as a 1980 state public speaking award winner. Ross went to Chicago as the 1981 state forestry winner. He also competed in the National Livestock Judging Contest in Louisville, Kentucky as a member of the 1982 Kansas State Fair first-place livestock judging team.

The trips and the chances to visit with other 4-Hers have opened our minds. But they've also made us appreciate the strength of the Kansas 4-H program.

We've worked hard in and reaped many benefits from the traditional 4-H club program. We've seen changes in the 4-H program and support those that have made 4-H more appealing to a variety of youth.

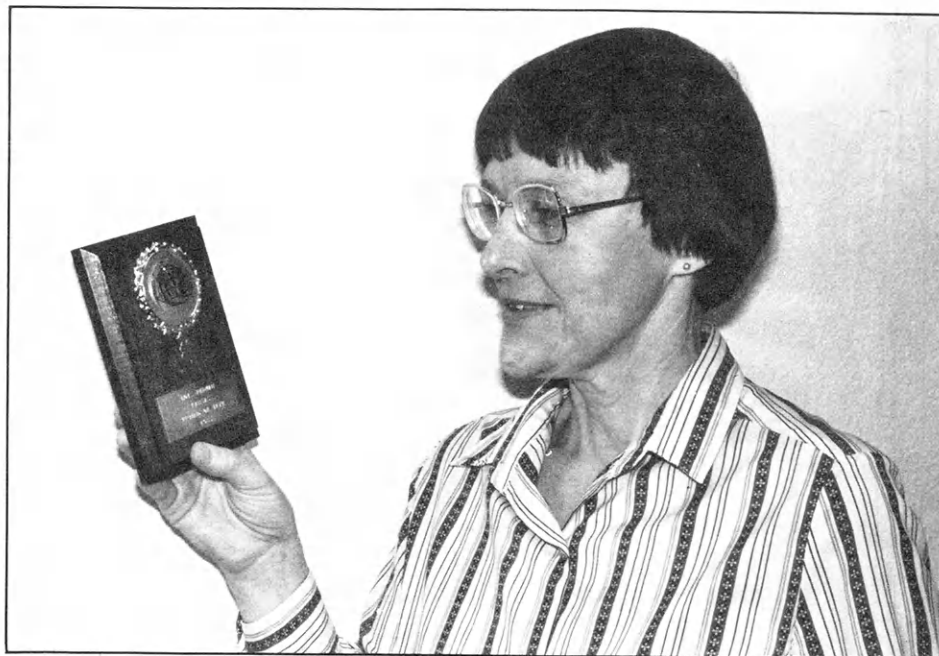

Mom says the addition of such new projects as arts and crafts, ecology, home beautification and self-determined has been good because they help break down barriers between city and rural children.

In the past children who joined 4-H usually had at least one parent who had been a member as a child. That certainly is not true anymore. A year before the state 4-H office introduced a new member-parent-leader orientation program, the Vinland club organized extensive youth and parent instruction sessions to explain details about the 4-H program. More than 50 people attended some sessions.

"It's been good for the club. We need people to bring fresh ideas and new approaches. A club should fit the needs of its members," Mom says.

Our satisfaction with traditional 4-H explains our attitude toward some of the other changes we've seen. Retaining older members in 4-H continues to be a problem. Since our family has always placed a high value on following through, we're not in favor of relaxed rules on project completion and record book completion.

We know 4-H has brought our family closer. It's the one activity that all of us have in common. It's made our family much larger than just the Clelands — Vinland is part of us, too. 4-H has given us all something to share and something to be proud of.

International 4-H Youth Exchange (IFYE) alumni present an annual Friend of IFYE award. Lois Redman, who has traveled extensively and assists Kansas youth with international trips and exchanges, is the 1983 recipient.

Redman brings global perspective to Kansas

"Kids today realize they are growing up in a global world. They know that within their lifetimes, they will probably have to deal with people of many different cultures." These comments by Lois Redman, extension specialist in 4-H and youth programs at Kansas State University, describe the increasing interest in the international programs she coordinates.

Redman's work with the International 4-H Youth Exchange (IFYE) recently was recognized when she received the Kansas Friends of IFYE annual award given by alumni.

Redman, who has worked with 4-H youth programs in Missouri and Oregon, came to Kansas five years ago. Her 30-year career is rich in Extension 4-H-Youth work. During that time she has guided international programs from inception to national recognition.

Her success comes from a blend of behind-the-scenes hard work and a belief that young people want to learn more about international neighbors. IFYE representatives, ages 19 to 25, travel to foreign countries to learn the culture by living it. They stay in designated homes and join into the activities of their host families.

"I find these young adults become more self-assured after their IFYE experience. They see the world in a different way — from the perspective of those they live with," Redman says.

Benefits don't stop once the representative returns home. Kansas IFYE's spend two months reporting across the state. Last year's IFYE's reached more than 22,000 Kansans in 45 counties with their international messages, photographs and displays.

For the first time last year, Kansas IFYE's also developed lessons for school children and contributed slide sets to the state Extension lending library.

The IFYE Ambassador program is for younger teens, ages 15 to 19, who experience a 6 to 8 weeks stay in a foreign country. This year, six Kansans will leave in June for Canada and other lands.

Redman also coordinates the LABO exchange program, Kansas' largest international program. Participants, 12 or older, spend a month living with a Japanese family. In turn, Japanese youngsters visit host families in Kansas.

Foreign specialists sometimes come here to study with her and she has visited 25 countries as an Extension 4-H youth specialist to learn, advise and work.

Parent-Teen Relationship

thoughts of suicide may be entertained. The suicide rate for teenagers in the last 20 years has tripled. More girls attempt it, but more boys succeed in taking their own lives.

Consider the situation serious if you notice a teenager behaving in the following ways:

- Talking despondently. "I'd be better off dead." "You'd be better off without me." "I just can't take anymore."

- Talking about suicide, life after death, death itself, while in an extremely low or depressed state.

- Buying, stealing or possessing drugs that can cause death.

- Changing physically due to deep depression. Dramatic weight loss and/or dramatic changes in sleeping habits may be signs.

- Changing socially due to depression. Examples are withdrawal from friends and family and near total loss of any interest in activities, school, sports, or in things that the teen had interest in prior to the depressed state.

- Expressing, by word or behavior, a sense of extreme hopelessness and helplessness.

- Expressing attitudes of "nobody cares" or "I'm worthless."

If any of these signs are present, you may need to get help for the teenager. Listen and try to build a bridge of confidence.

Professional help may be obtained from a hospital emergency room, a doctor, counselor, clergyman, psychiatrist or mental health clinic. Some communities have a suicide prevention center or suicide hotline.

Remember that the teenage years are a time for growth in both the teenager and the parent. With a certain amount of wisdom and a good sense of humor, most families weather the period and move on to a strong adult-adult relationship.
