GRASS MOWING

Leon Haselhorst of Hays is mowing grass at Kanopolis State Park. The inlet tower for the water discharge tunnel of Kanopolis Dam is just across the water.

GOOD CATCH

Aaron Simmons of Lyons caught this nice channel cat at the tunnel outlet of Kanopolis Dam. Simmons said the best time to fish is at high water. The outlet gates had been opened the day before to release additional water from the heavy rains. Simmons is the custodian of the Rice county courthouse at Lyons.

Specter Of Meat Imports Still Around

Meat imports subject to U.S. quota regulation have picked up tremendously since the dock strike, but the biggest surge may still be ahead, Agriculture Department sources say.

The meat mostly is fresh or frozen beef and veal but also includes some varieties of mutton and goat. The beef is used mainly in hamburger and other processed meat products.

Each year the United States sets an adjusted quota for these types of meat — supplied mostly by Australia and New Zealand — based on a previous import average and changes in U.S. domestic meat output. The base quota for 1969 is 988 million pounds, boosted from 950.3 million last year to reflect rising U.S. production.

The 1964 law allows a 10 percent excess over the base quota before restrictions on imports are invoked. Thus far supplying nations have held shipments to within the maximum limit.

However, quota meat imports rose sharply last summer and foreign suppliers voluntarily cut back to avoid the U.S. restrictions.

A similar situation may be developing this year, sources say.

Quota meat imports during January and February were 41.9 million pounds and 50.4 million, respectively, far less than the 80.7 million and 72.6 million reported a year earlier.

But after the dock strike was settled, shipments bulged to 136.1 million pounds during March — more than double the 64.1 million during the month in 1968.

This made a total for the first quarter of 228.4 million pounds, a five percent gain from the same period in 1968.

Unofficial estimates for April place quota meat imports at around 80 million pounds, about the same as a year ago. But the sharp reduction from March does not necessarily mean foreign suppliers have tapered off, a department official said.

Many ships were not unloaded in late March in time to make another round trip during April, he said. Thus, he added, the lower April estimate may be misleading.

"Where we're really going to get loaded up (in imports) is in the third quarter," the official said. "It depends a lot on the circumstances such as available shipping and how much Australia and New Zealand plan to move, but I think the possibility is there."

Each three months the department estimates the level of quota meat imports for the entire calendar year. If any estimate is greater than 110 percent of the year's basic quota, then import restrictions must be imposed.

Some livestock groups have opposed the present meat quota law, saying there are loopholes which need tightening to protect U.S. stockmen.

But U.S. cattle prices are high and congressional sources say there is little chance that tougher meat import legislation will be enacted this year — as long as cattlemen are in a favorable market situation.

TOUGH WEEK OF WEATHER

A barrage of rain and hail inflicted several million dollars worth of damage in south central Kansas last week, with the second major hail of the spring nearly knocking out the wheat crop in Reno County and a heavy flooding along the Walnut river sending up barricades like this one at Eldorado.

Johnny Kaw Says:

The reason there are no "showers" for grooms is that he is all washed up already.

Chicken Is A Treasure - Trove Of Nutrition

The reason chicken turns up so frequently in most homes is simple . . . it tastes so good. But did you know that when you serve this popular bird, you provide your family with a nutritional bonanza?

Chicken has a protein content as high as any other meat . . . and higher than most meats. In addition to the protein quantity, chicken offers protein quality, too . . . the protein contains all the essential amino acids, the chemical units of which protein is made.

Because the amino acid composition of animal muscle is similar to that of human tissues . . . and these amino acids are supplied in about the same proportions in which they are needed by the body . . . animal protein has a high nutritive value.

According to the national Broiler Council, a minimum portion of three ounces of broiled chicken without bone supplies 23 grams of protein. The recommended daily minimum requirement for protein is 70 grams for a man and 58 grams for a woman.

Chicken is a good source of the B vitamins, especially niacin . . . the vitamin that helps prevent pellagra. And chicken outranks other meats in vitamin A, necessary for healthy skin, vision and the development of bones and teeth.

The bird has an interesting fat story, too. A 3-ounce portion of broiled chicken without bone contains only nine grams of fat . . . less than that of any other meat. But the fat it does contain has more unsaturated fatty acids than other meat fats.

Linoleic acid is essential for growth and reproduction and under dietary conditions it lowers blood cholesterol in adults when fed as 25 percent or more of the fat intake.

Chicken fat contains up to ten times as much linoleic acid as the fat of ruminant animals.

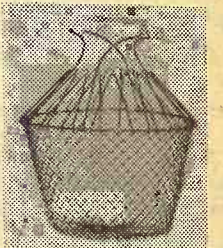

While chicken is lavish with nutrients, it is stingy with calories which makes it ever-welcome on the diet menu.

Essential To Choose Proper Plants For Shady Areas

New gardeners often complain that they can't grow flowers because they have shade. However, there is an answer.

The proper choice of plants to grow in a shady spot is all-important. Of course, since plants depend on sunlight in order to make their food, no plant will grow where there is no light but a number will grow where light is subdued to some extent.

Try begonias or coleus. Other plants that will grow in fairly heavy shade are impatiens and flowering tobacco.

Should you have lightly shaded areas, the number of flowering plants you can grow increases. There you might try sweet alyssum, balsam, forget-me-nots, pansy and viola.

Treatment of flowers growing in shade is important, too. Watering should be deep but not too frequent as less water is lost, from both soil and plant, where there is less sun.

Mulching is beneficial, but only if of a material that admits plenty of air. A non-porous or too-deep mulch will only help plant diseases become established, so avoid peat and hold depth to one inch.

If plants become spindly or "leggy," this means they are reaching out to light. Increase this if you can, but otherwise nip out too-long stems, just above a pair of leaves, to make plants more compact. Thin any leaves or stems which overhang the leggy plants.

Remove dead or faded flowers and cut back plants directly after a period of prolific bloom. This rejuvenates the plants and will result in even more blossoms for you to enjoy at a later date.

Cleans Combs

Try using one of the new laundry pre-soaks to clean combs and brushes. Let the brushes soak for about an hour or a little more, rinse well and let dry.

To sharpen scissors or pink-ing shears, cut through aluminum foil, fold and continue to cut for fifty times or more.

Beef Bright Spot

The beef cattle market is the brightest spot in the farm picture. It is a bright spot because prices are good and also because the production and consumption of beef is at an all-time high. Thus, the good prices are not the result of scarcity, but of a very strong consumer demand for beef.

Beef cattle prices have been climbing for two years. Recent quotations were about $5 higher than last year, and the best since 1952.

More beef produced. The output of beef has more than doubled since 1952. The supply of beef has increased from 62 pounds per person in 1952 to more than 109 pounds in 1968. Chances are good that the per capita figure will top 110 pounds this year.

During the past four years alone, the supply of beef per person has increased more than 10 per cent. But consumer demand increased twice as much—spending for beef increased about 20 per cent. This large increase in spending lifted retail prices for beef about 10 per cent. Some of the increase in the purchase of beef at the retail counter has been passed along to producers in the form of higher prices for cattle.

From boom to bust again? The good cattle prices have brought a new wave of optimism to the cattle industry. Some cattlemen, however, are apprehensive. They know that cattle feeding has been a boom-and-bust business. A new boom has come. Can the bust be far behind?

Cattle prices may have moved upward into a new range. They may swing around the $30 mark (for Choice steers), instead of around $25 as in recent years.

Of course, cattle prices have been higher than they are now and then they tumbled like Humpty Dumpty. Prices for Choice steers averaged $35 a hundred pounds in the spring of 1952. Two years later they were down to $22.

Situation changed. The situation and outlook now, however, are much different than in 1952.

The high prices for cattle then were caused largely by a post-war type of inflation. People had a lot of money to spend, supplies of beef were short, and marketing costs were still relatively low. The prices of cattle came tumbling down when the output of beef increased sharply, and marketing costs increased rapidly under the pressures of big increases in wage rates.

Marketing costs are still increasing, and probably will continue to do so for many years. But there is no prospect for any large increase in beef production during the next few years.

Turning point ahead. Prices of beef will eventually get too high for some consumers. When these consumers slow-up their beef buying just a little, beef will accumulate in coolers—and the demand for cattle will shrink. Judging from history, prices will decline for four to six months. Prices may decline 15 or 20 per cent before the bottom is reached and a recovery begins.

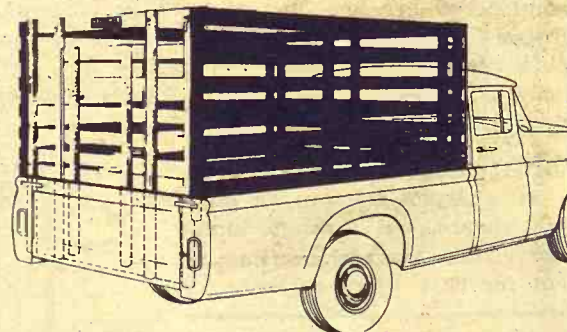

In many recent years, cattle prices have been very good or very poor in the first half of the year. They have been more moderate during the last six months. Thus, it may be that prices will return to more moderate levels during the last half of this year.

NEA To Lose Tax Exempt Status

The National Education Association is expecting to hear officially that the Internal Revenue Service has revoked its tax-exempt status, an official of the organization said Thursday.

It would be the second major notional organization to have its tax-exempt status removed in recent weeks. There were indications it might be only the forerunner of a number of others to come.

The new Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Randolph W. Thrower, has ordered his staff to place "a strict construction" on the requirements of the tax law that organizations be operated "exclusively" for religious, education and other tax-exempt purposes if they are to retain their exemption.

Thrower said in an interview he was particularly concerned about "the ideological organizations that are far from the traditional patterns of religion or education."

He would not spell out precisely what he meant by "ideological organizations."

The other group that recently lost its exempt status is Americans United for Separation of Church and State, which received its notice of revocation in April, but made it public only last week.

The National Education Association, which claims more than a million members, considers itself a professional organization of elementary and secondary school teachers and administrators.

Big Blue Bridge Still Out

MARYSVILLE — It will cost an estimated $15,000 to $20,000 to repair the Shroyer Bridge over the Big Blue River near here, Fred Craft, Marshall County Commissioner, told a group of 25 area residents this week.

The bridge, considered unsafe, is closed.

Craft said the county bridge fund can cover the cost of repairing the bridge, but added commissioners have had difficulty in hiring a contractor to make the needed repairs.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Gertrude Kirkendall, owner of land at both ends of the bridge, has offered to provide the fill dirt and rock necessary to shore up the terminals of the bridge.

No Letup On Imports

Imports of foreign merchandise hit another all-time high in April, the government reported today, topping $3 billion for the first time in history.

Despite the surge in imports to a seasonally adjusted $3.2 billion, the Commerce Department said, the United States posted a $176.5 million foreign trade surplus for the month since exports climbed to $3.4 million.

Shipping was still showing hangover effects from the strike of dock workers at east and Gulf Coast ports, a government spokesman said.

William A. Chartener, assistant secretary of commerce for economic affairs, said imports moved into the country more readily than outgoing shipments could be accommodated.

"Exports were held down by clogged port facilities," Chartener said, "particularly in New York and New Orleans. Cargo pipelines were so full that the Association of American Railroads declared a temporary embargo on shipments to these two ports."

Although the restriction on rail shipments to the two cities have been lifted, sizable backlogs remain, he said.

More Sorghum Use But Less Is Exported

The Agriculture department says domestic use of sorghum this year may exceed the record 614 million bushels of 1966-67, but the export picture for the nation's No. 2 livestock feed grain is not bright.

Total domestic and export use was 485 million bushels, during the 9-month period of the market period beginning last October 1. This was only slightly more than the total used during October to March of a year earlier, but the big gain was in domestic use — 441 million bushels, compared with 380 million in 1967-68.

Sorghum grain exports dragged in the 9-month period to 44 million bushels, compared with 103 million a year earlier, the department said. Officials said last week the over-all feed outlook for 1968-69 was for generally more domestic use and a reduction in carryover supplies next October 1 of about 4 million tons to a total of around 44 million.

Leading the surge in domestic use — mainly because of a big gain in livestock feeding this year — was a 6 per cent gain on corn consumption. Some 2.5 billion bushels of the nation's top feed grain were used during October to March officials said.

Domestic use of all the major feed grains — corn, sorghum, grain, oats and barley — was up about 13 per cent since October 1 and may average 8 to 10 per cent greater for the entire marketing year, the report said.

Last year's production of the four feed grains was about 168 million tons. Officials estimate about 172 million tons will be needed this marketing year to meet domestic and export requirements, or about four million tons more than farmers produced in 1968. Exports, however, were estimated at 18 million tons, compared with more than 23 million in 1967-68.

The Kansas Park and Resources Authority plans to spend $767,650 this summer on improvements at 18 state parks.

The total includes $383,825 in state general revenue funds and an equal amount from federal land and water conservation funds.

Gary L. Haller, state park planner, said the work will become available.

Haller said more than 4 million persons visited 16 state parks during 1968 and an even larger number is expected this summer when 17 parks will be in operation.

State park facilities at Cheney Reservoir, northwest of Wichita, attracted the largest number of visitors, 753,661. Tuttle Creek Reservoir, near Manhattan, was second with 678,928 visitors and Elk City Reservoir was third with 408,200.

Haller said some park facilities will be open for the first time this summer at Perry Reservoir near Topeka. Facilities at Glen Elder Reservoir, in North Central Kansas, will not be open this summer.

Here are the state parks, the total to be expended this summer and the specific projects:

TRACTORS MAKE HIM NERVOUS

"Tractors make me nervous," says Francis Grothaus, 60, of Lebanon, Smith county, so he does his farm work with horses and mules. Besides farming, the old way, Grothaus raises Belgian horses and mules to sell.

Grothaus says demand for mules for feedlot use in winter is quite strong and he sells matched pairs of working mules from $300 to $1000 a set. He produces the mules by crossing a large sorrel blond jack with Belgian mares to produce large draft mules. Grothaus said he also has a sorrel blond Belgian stallion which he uses to produce Belgian brood mares for raising the mules. He said he has about 40 head of Belgian mares and 10 mules. He raised 15 mules last year.

Greenbugs In Seedling Sorghums Scattered

Greenbugs are attacking seedling sorghum plants from extreme southeast Kansas to at least one area in north-central and southwest Kansas, reports Dr. H. Leroy Brooks, Extension entomologist at Kansas State University. The counties reporting problems include Sumner, Labette, Cowley, Montgomery, Chase, and Wilson counties in southeast Kansas, Republic county in the north-central area, and Haskell in the southwest.

Infestations in sorghum fields range from only traces in some fields to heavy aphid infestations in others.

Some producers who have not visited fields in the last few days are finding plants loaded with aphids. In some cases, damage is serious enough to warrant replanting. Since seedling sorghum is very susceptible to greenbug injury, inspection may need to be conducted on almost a daily basis, Dr. Brooks advises, because aphid populations can build up very, very rapidly. Natural enemies are largely ineffective in stopping aphid infestations before seedling damage occurs.

"The chemicals we are using are far better at controlling infestations than preventing an aphid outbreak," Dr. Brooks says. "It is, therefore, unfeasible to spray sorghum fields before plants show infestation. It is also poor judgement to wait until the plants are heavily infested and injured beyond recovery."

Producers must strive to apply control measures when the majority of the plants become infested but before serious visible damage occurs to the plants.

It is quite likely that infestations could develop rapidly in most of central, eastern, and parts of western Kansas in the next couple of weeks. Sorghum plants will be susceptible to attack as soon as the plants emerge from the soil, and producers statewide are cautioned to be on the alert for possible aphid problems.

In controlling greenbugs on sorghum, producers are urged to follow the recommendations listed in the 1969 Kansas Insect Control Recommendations.

Of the materials recommended, malathion and diazinon are safe for use in ground equipment. Producers should check cost figures closely. In some cases it may be almost as economical to have some materials applied by commercial applicators as it is to use others in ground equipment, Dr. Brooks notes.

The size of fields, weather conditions, proximity to farmsteads and dwellings, are some of the factors which must be considered in deciding which method to use. Experienced commercial applicators can apply either parathion, Systox or phosdrin in addition to malathion and diazinon. Of these, parathion has been highly effective and is generally very economical to use. It gives a high degree of immediate control with a very short residual life.

Systox is a systemic insecticide that gives good initial kill and also provides some residual action. There could be some advantage in using Systox in fields at this time where there is a threat of reinfestation immediately after treatment.

There are a number of different cereal aphids which also may be found in sorghum fields, Dr. Brooks points out. Only the greenbug should be considered as a serious threat to the crop. Producers should check with their county agents at any time they have questions regarding the identification of aphids they find in sorghum fields.

It takes MONEY to GROW!

Modern agricultural methods pay their way—if you're capitalized to improve your farming program and you're willing to think hard and work hard!

Capital requirements for production purposes come high, and the man who's moving ahead has had to increase his allocations to allow for the added costs of keeping up with the times.

Your local PCA pioneered in budgeted financing for production purposes. The PCA is staffed by people who know modern farming and how it can pay if properly followed.

FIRE AT CYLINDER PLANT

Here's how the main plant of the Cross Manufacturing Co. at Lewis looked after a $250,000 fire there. The plant, in Edwards county, near Kinsley, manufactures hydraulic cylinders. The plant has about 200 employees. The company's lathes and turning machinery was declared a total loss.

Wheat Marketing Plan Like Milk Orders?

Price-setting power in the marketing of wheat would be placed in the hands of farmers, rather than purchasers, by a congressional bill receiving increasing discussion in the grain belt.

In an interview with the Dodge City Daily Globe, Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., who introduced the bill, said his legislation is designed to supplement existing farm programs — not replace them.

"In my opinion we will need these programs for a long time into the future," he said. "The problem is, of course, that they are now inadequately funded."

Mondale's bill has drawn the attention of farmers because the present Agricultural Act of 1965 expires next year, and no new farm program has yet been offered by the Nixon administration.

The Mondale bill is a major departure from past farm legislation in that wheat is priced through formation of a marketing order similar to those now used by the nation's dairymen.

Also, it can exclude sale of wheat grown in non-wheat areas of the nation.

Marketing of wheat would be through an agricultural relations board appointed by the President. If producers feel file with this board a petition prices are too low, they must for higher prices and defining the area within which the grain is commercially produced.

If the board determines prices are too low, a referendum of farmers would be ordered to form a marketing committee of producers to negotiate a fair minimum price or non-price terms for the sale and purchase of grain.

Once a minimum price is established, both growers and buyers would be bound to honor it. Penalties for avoiding compliance are included in the bill.

The measure, said Mondale, had its origin with farmers and farm groups and is a composite of their thinking.

"A great many people, including leaders of farm organizations and farmers, the cooperative movement, agricultural economists from the land grant colleges and elsewhere, gave their ideas," he said.

"When I became convinced that supplemental approaches to existing farm programs were needed, in addition to the basic bargaining tools that other segments of society already had, I consulted literally hundreds of experts and laymen in the field. The bill I introduced is a distillation of their ideas and mine."

He is hopeful his bill will come to a vote before the present farm program expires, but admits it may be ahead of its time.

"Farm bargaining has been a dream of farmers and their organizations for years," he said. "My legislation is an attempt to make that dream concrete; to start a dialogue that will some day result in legislation."

"This may well be several years in the future, although I am hopeful my legislation will come to a vote before expiration of the present farm programs in 1970-71."

Even if his bill is not approved, the price-setting practices it contains could become fact under existing legislation, Sen. Mondale emphasized. This can be done through use of the marketing order act of 1937. This legislation, still in force, is included as an amendment to Mondale's bill.

"I believe both approaches are worthy of consideration," he said. "This is why I included both in my bill."

Support for the Mondale bill is seen coming from farmers in the Midwest more than the Far West, "where corporate agriculture prevails," Mondale sees opposition coming from those who would be involved with bargaining with farmers if the bill is adopted.

When Is Money Saved Buying Side Of Beef?

Can families head off rising meat prices by purchasing in large quantities for storage in home freezers?

The Agriculture department says some arithmetic is required to know.

A 300-pound side of beef selling perhaps for 65 or 70 cents a pound, including cutting, wrapping, and quick-freezing, may tempt city dwellers accustomed to paying triple that for some fancy cuts packaged neatly in supermarket cases. But, department food experts caution, the 300-pound side of beef needs to be cut up, trimmed and boned before storing in the family freezer. Loss from trimming of fat and boning can be 20 to 30 percent or even more.

Right away the 300 pound side can be reduced to 225 pounds of usable meat through a 25 percent trimming and boning loss. Among the 225 pounds will be a mixture of cuts, both high and low-cost, including short ribs, stewing beef and brisket. Failure to use these cuts, which the consumer might not ordinarily buy at retail counters, can further reduce the advantage of the large purchase.

The 225 pounds of usable meat typically would include: 72 pounds of roasts including 44 pounds of chuck, 18 pounds of rib and nearly 10 pounds of rump. 72 pounds of ground beef. 73 pounds of stew meat. 73 pounds of steaks, including 33 pounds of round and 40 of loin.

cuts such as sirloin, T-bone and porterhouse. The department home economists say roasts and steaks should not be stored in freezers longer than 8 to 12 months, and 3 to 4 months for ground beef.

Full details of the pros and cons are included in a new booklet, "How to Buy Meat For Your Freezer," available for 20 cents from the U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402, the department said.

Farm Banks Must Spell Out Interest Cost Too

Farm credit banks have a new responsibility to inform the public as to the cost of farm loans under the "truth-in-lending law" passed by the 1968 Congress, a speaker told Wichita Bank for Cooperatives (WBC) meeting at Wichita.

Rodger Guffey, general counsel and secretary of Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, said the law, which goes into effect July 1, applies to all loans made by banks and businesses, except those made to corporations.

The WBC, which makes loans only to cooperatives of Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado and New Mexico does not have to make explanations about charges on credit.

The Federal Land Bank and the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank, both of Wichita, however, must explain the credit cost each time they send out statements.

William S. May, vice president of FLB, speaking at the meeting's final luncheon said the costs of credit to the farmer "continue to be firm with no apparent softening of interest rates."

"Money borrowed by farm credit banks doesn't seem to get any cheaper," he said. "The last loan was the highest ever paid with a charge of 7.10 per cent borrowed on nine months' debentures," he explained.

"Kansas' land values are softening in a few places in western and southwestern Kansas, but land values over the state as a whole are holding firm or increasing a small percentage," May said.

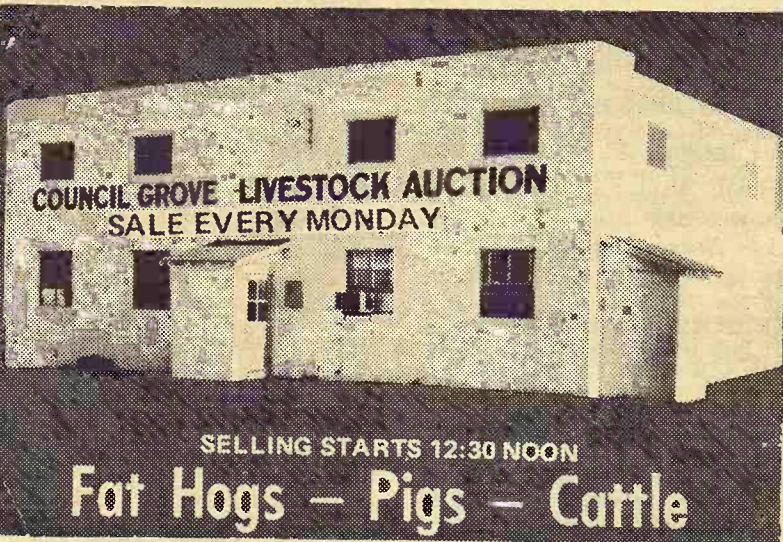

Nothing like a 7 to 8 per cent increase prevailing from 1965 to 1968 was predicted by May.

Reasons for the letup, he said, are the plentiful outlook for a wheat crop, the world market price outlook, dry years on the western border, increase in ad valorem taxes and lack of a definite farm program beyond this year.

HORSE TRAFFIC WAS FASTER

That horse-drawn traffic in the cities 60 years ago was faster than present auto traffic was brought out in this recent work by Kansas City Star cartoonist Dowling.

We had a good sale last week with receipts of 214 cattle and 431 hogs. Had a $23.90 top on fat hogs. Good steady market. Light weight heifers and steers were $1 to $2 higher. Following is a partial listing:

Cigaret Price Hike

Smokers not only have to decide if the health warnings will curtail their cigaret smoking, but if a new price hike won't lessen their liking for the smokes also.

A general increase in wholesale prices last week will likely result in increases in prices in cartons, packages, and vending machines. The increase at the wholesale level — from $9.45 per thousand cigarets to $9.80 — amounts to less than a cent a pack, but package prices will likely go up two cents and vending machine prices by a nickel.

Western Kans. Farmers Cut Irrigation Cost Thru Own Power Company

A handful of Ford County farmers, determined to lower the cost of powering their irrigation wells, battled two big public utilities, won, and now are operating their own natural gas company.

Only 20 farmers in an area southeast of Dodge City organized the Enterprise Gas Association, Inc., which operates in one township, almost a year ago. Their fight for operating rights took them before the Kansas Corporation Commission at Topeka, where they were opposed by the Northern Natural Gas company, and its subsidiary, the People's Natural Gas company.

Although they had to concede some of the area they had filed to serve, the farmers now are providing gas for 13 irrigation wells and are planning domestic gas service to farmhouses within their area.

The natural gas they use comes from a Cities Service pipeline, laid to serve the new Farmland Industries anhydrous ammonia plant east of Dodge City.

Enterprise Gas Association has its headquarters in the home of its treasurer and has only one employee, a line superintendent.

Since it began operation, the new company has lowered the cost of natural gas to its irrigation customers by half. Because of increasing demand, the company already is considering expansion. In fact, it was expanded before any pipe was laid.

The idea for the company started when Cities Service wanted easements across the farms to lay the line to the new ammonia plant in Dodge City. Why not use this line to lower irrigation costs, the farmers reasoned.

The farmers met and decided to band together and refuse to allow easements unless Cities Service agreed to taps being placed upon the new pipeline. Such taps would allow the farmers to use some of the gas bound for the ammonia plant, yet would not hamper the amount received by the plant.

Study To See Who Really Pays Taxes

Who is paying the tax bill in Kansas? Where does the real tax burden lie?

Those questions hopefully would be answered in a study which would be made for the Joint Legislative Committee which is studying the state's tax structure, Sen. Frank Hodge, R-Hutchinson, said Monday.

Hodge is the chairman of the committee of House members and senators which is beginning the second year of a study designed to cover the entire field of taxation in Kansas.

Hodge said the committee is in the process of negotiating with a person to make such a study.

He said it would be designed to show how the burden of taxation lies on various income groups, occupations and businesses.

"You hear so often that so and so is paying more than their fair share of taxes," said Hodge. "But we don't really have any figures to back this up."

meantime, heard some figures which indicated a wide difference in the inventories reported by some automobile dealers at the end of their tax years and the average monthly inventories reported for property tax purposes.

Hodge said he does not know what the figures really show, but there is such a wide difference the committee is looking into the situation.

Hodge said spokesmen for automobile dealers will appear before the committee on Wednesday.

The committee feels there shouldn't be such a difference," said Hodge.

Hodge said the committee tentatively agreed to meet three days in June to discuss the sales tax; three days in July to consider the income tax; five days in August to take up the inheritance tax and miscellaneous excise taxes and a property tax; five days in September and five days more in October as a followup on all fields; three days

Hardin Opposes Subsidy Limits

The secretary of agriculture, Clifford Hardin, said he hoped the Senate would reverse the action of the House, limiting farm subsidy payments to $20,000.

Hardin said he still is convinced the cost of the farm program would be greatly increased if the limitation were allowed to stand. Hardin insisted that if the limitation were to become law, then the department would have to make payments to cotton farmers under the 1965 farm act formula and that would cost 160 million dollars more.

Rep. Paul Findlay (R-Ill.), who was a leader in the House fight to limit the payments, disputes Hardin's contentions and says 300 million dollars will be saved because of the ceiling.

"I'm concerned with the economics, not the ethics or morality of it," Hardin said in answer to a question about huge payments now being made to some farm operators for not planting certain crops. He added the department seeks to keep acres out of production to permit the market to have free play.

Hardin acknowledged, however, that the department had committees working on putting together a new farm program.

"We do think a sound program can be devised which can modify the payment structure — have a modifying downward," he added.

He said the administration was trying to come up with a "consensus program" in consultation with farmers and congressional consideration. He would not talk about what proposals might be offered or are under discussion.

Pressed about what would happen if the Senate goes along with the limitation, Hardin confessed he really did not know. At the same time he thought some of the wheat producers who are getting the huge payments would elect to stay in the program, while others would plant additional acres.

Asked if he thought it morally reprehensible that some counties did not have food programs for the hungry, but its farmers receive the huge subsidies, Hardin replied they are two separate issues.

"Payments to farmers for removing acres from production are not related to feeding the poor," Hardin said.

"I am very much concerned," he continued, "that some county boards have not seen fit to contract with us for food stamps or commodity-distribution programs. We are going to try to have them all in (either of the programs) in the next several months."

As for discrimination in some department services, Hardin said he was working with other federal agencies and that it had been found that discrimination does exist.

"We are proceeding with a reorganization of this effort," Hardin said, but he added he would not discuss the details. He noted there had been "some improvement" in the number of Negroes serving on local agriculture stabilization and conservation committees.

Hardin announced he was going to Europe in June, to Brussels to discuss agricultural, industrial and trade issues with the European Economic Community, and also to London.

Management Advice For Egg Men

Extra time spent on management can pay big dividends for the egg producer, reports a Kansas State University Extension economist.

M. E. Jackson points out that up to 10 percent of the eggs produced by many big flocks are dirty or cracked. Producer prices for these undergrade eggs average only about half that of Grade A large eggs, he explains.

Mechanical gathering equipment and roll-away cages and nests encourage producers to gather eggs only once or twice a day. This results in more checked or cracked eggs.

Gathering eggs more frequently can help eliminate this problem, Jackson says. Eggs from large operations should be continuously gathered from 8 a.m. until noon and then from 2 to 4 p.m. This not only reduces dirties and checks, but also gets the eggs under refrigeration more quickly.

Sort out the dirty and checked eggs as soon as they are gathered. If possible, wash the dirty ones.

Another area where management can save you money is in feeding. Wasting one-tenth of a pound of feed per dozen eggs produced by a 10,000 bird flock can cost you between $1000 and $1500 a year.

Proper adjustment and maintenance of your mechanical feeders can help hold your feed costs in check, the economist says.

Jackson has another suggestion to help reduce the number of undergrade eggs. Ventilate properly to remove ammonia from the laying house. This will make the house more comfortable for the hens and the caretaker.

RB 57s OVER AREA

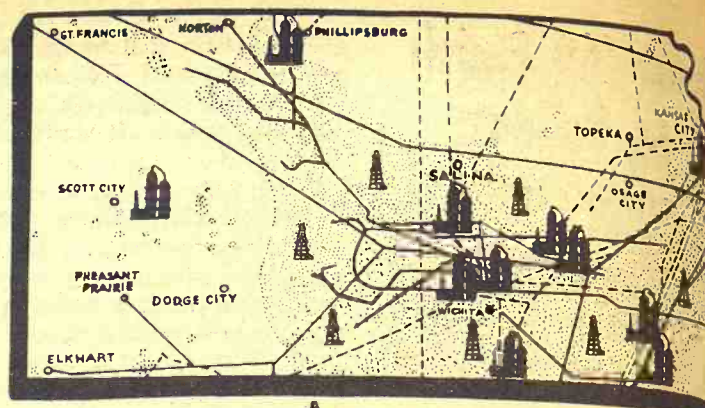

Low level, high speed flight training by RB-57s will be conducted over a part of the G & G area this month, as well as for the remainder of the year.

The 190th Tactical Reconnaissance Group of the Kansas National Guard stationed at Forbes AFB will fly RB-57s at an altitude of 500 feet and at speeds up to 360 knots.

One low level route starts northeast of Great Bend going north to near Beloit, east northeast to ten miles north of Clay Center, southeast to near Wamego, southwest to Council Grove, then southwest ending east of McPherson.

The training starts June 7-8. Another route will be used in western Kansas.

The 190th fly photo reconnaissance aircraft consists of 78 officers and 556 airmen.

OIL INDUSTRY PROPAGANDA

Clearly concerned about increasing efforts to remove tax advantages from petroleum income, the oil industry in Kansas has started strong efforts to impress upon the state the size and breadth of oil in the state.

This map, for example, from the Kansas Petroleum Industries Committee, shows the extent of producing areas, refineries, crude oil pipelines, and finished product pipelines in the state.

The oil group points out that with a 7-cent-a-gallon tax on gasoline as of July 1, revenues of $72 million a year amount to 20% of all state tax receipts.

Kansas ranks third in petroleum pipeline mileage, seventh in oil productions, and ninth in refining capacity.

Some other figures from the industry which attest to the size of it: there is oil or gas production in 92 of Kansas' 105 counties, 14% of all land in the state is leased or productive, 12 refineries hire 3700 workers at a payroll cost of $29 million annually, there are 28 natural gasoline plants, the total mileage of pipelines is greater than the mileage of state administered highways.

Doubt '69 Finish Of Ag Building At Fairgrounds

HUTCHINSON — Kansas State Fair officials say it is doubtful if the new agriculture building and its accompanying wheat symbol can be completed in time for this year's fair in September.

The new 120 by 240 foot facility will be located south of the existing agriculture building, which is expected to be razed.

Fair secretary Wallace White said the state architect's office is not certain that the contract or can guarantee completion by fair time, but that every effort will be made to have the new unit ready.

Construction is expected to be postponed until after the fair deadline unless there are assurances the deadline can be met. A bid letting on the $190,000 project is expected in June.

Less Spending For Eating Out

People seem to be thinking twice about taking their families out to dine this year, perhaps because of higher prices for food and drink, says the Agriculture department.

Officials say food store sales during the first quarter of 1969 increased 7 per cent while those reported by eating and drinking places rose only 2 per cent. About one-fifth of the nation's 101 billion dollar food bill last year was spent for meals outside the home. The January-March rate of outside dining was about the same as for the last three quarters of 1968, the department said in a report.

On a percentage basis of average take-home pay, more than 13.5 cents of the family spending dollar went for food at home, with another 3.5 cents spent on outside meals. Not included in the 1968 food bill was 15 billion dollars spent on alcoholic beverages, the report said, raising the nation's total tab for food and drink to 116 billion.

But the first quarter estimate for food spending this year showed signs of less spending for outside meals. "Apparently consumers are reacting to the relatively high prices for food away from home," the department said.

However, the rate of spending for alcoholic drink this year appears to be rising somewhat. The first quarter rate indicated Americans would spend about 16 billion dollars for drink this year, up 1 million from 1968. This would mean a total food and drink bill for the nation this year of 121 billion, including 107 billion expected for all food — at home and in restaurants, the department said.

Little Favor For Year-Round School

HAYSVILLE — With 84 per cent of questionnaires tabulated, the majority has indicated they are against year-around school for the district.

Reporting at a Board of Education meeting, Jack Dorsey, chairman of an evaluation committee, said 80.5 per cent of surveys studied indicated disapproval of an extended school year.

Dorsey told board members the citizens committee received questionnaires distributed. Of the approximately 4500 forms that went into the district, 610 were answered and returned.

The remaining 16 percent of the questionnaires will be tabulated later, he said. A recommendation from the evaluating committee will be made at the next meeting of the board.

Patrons also were asked if they would be willing for the board to continue study of one of three approaches described to an extended school year. Dorsey said 54 per cent were against the idea, 25 per cent favored it and 21 per cent did not answer the question.

ANOTHER DEPOT TO BE CLOSED

People of Lindsborg are wondering if this depot will soon be closed. The Union Pacific wants to combine this depot with McPherson with only one agent stationed at McPherson. The grain companies and implement dealers in Lindsborg are especially concerned about this proposal. There may be a hearing about this later. Dean Anderson is the agent presently stationed at Lindsborg.

Rebuilding Funds At Herington

HERINGTON — Herington Industrial Development Inc., plans to erect three business buildings to replace facilities destroyed in two fires earlier in the year.

The corporation obtained an agreement from the city commission to issue approximately $330,000 in industrial revenue bonds for the project.

The letter of intent gives the corporation the opportunity to complete lease negotiations and other commitments necessary before bonds are sold and construction started.

Tentative plans are to erect three business buildings and make improvements at the Herington Cattle Co., W. H. Alward, corporation secretary, said.

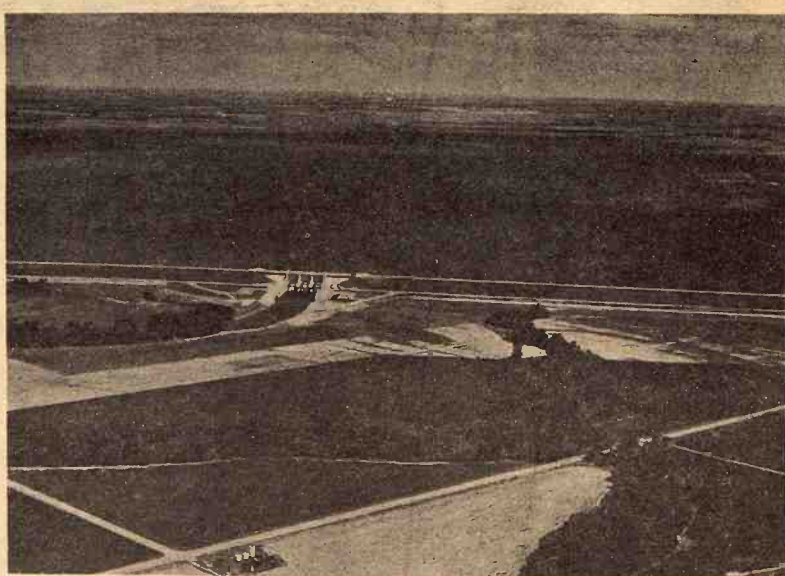

The Bank of Herington is replacing its fire-damaged structure.

Some business and professional tenants left "homeless" by the Feb. 20 and March 8 fires have made arrangements for permanent housing, but others are in temporary facilities.

MARION RESERVOIR DEDICATION NEXT WEEK

June 14 is the date of the dedication of the Marion Reservoir, which now contains 6000 acres of water at conservation level of 1350 feet.

State Still Nervous Over Watered Hams

The Kansas health department is still worried about "watered hams."

Evan Wright, director of the department's food and drug division, has had watered hams in his sights for several years and a Kansas statute controls their sale.

However, recent application of federal meat inspection law has prompted packers to start shipping them to Kansas. Federal law allows hams to contain up to 10% water. USDA permits hams to be watered if they are so labeled. Wright says a problem arises when the whole ham is cut into halves and slices and the label is removed.

The federal meat inspection laws says states cannot regulate meat sales in any manner that is in addition to or different from USDA.

Wright said he had recently consulted with Attorney General Kent Frizzell to see if that office would support the health department in enforcement of the state statute. Frizzell said the food and drug division should continue its enforcement.
