Co-operation versus Antagonism.

A great deal of effort is made to induce men to flee from densely populated cities to engage in agricultural pursuits in the country. This is all proper and right, perhaps, but it will never be very successful till the conditions of farming are somewhat changed for the better.

The great majority of farmers are not easy in pecuniary affairs; they find money the hardest thing in the world to raise. They are restricted in their efforts and crippled in their means for want of capital; they are loaded with debts which lead them to improvidence, or drive them to a state of dependency, and thus their whole life becomes one of excessive toil, wearing exposures, perpetual anxiety and hopeless slavery to the attainment of the material conditions of living.

The case is still worse with those who retire from the city without experience, without skill, without habits of labor and without capital, in order to retrieve their shattered fortunes by the profits of farming. We are persuaded that in a great majority of instances the experiment would end in disappointment, if not in hopeless ruin.

We do not like to take such dark views of the farmer's condition. We would like to paint a fairer picture and present more glowing colors. But with our eyes open we cannot but see the truth, nor must we shrink from it. It is well to know the worst. We shall apply the remedy only when we see the malignity of the disease.

Farmers must work out their own salvation.

There is an inherent vice in our present condition of society. It is the substitution of the love of wealth for the love of man. Humanity is made subservient to money. Riches are coveted not for the sake of elevating men; but men are valued according to their capacity to create wealth.

While this state of things remains there will be constant distress among the laboring poor; cities will put on the semblance and air of prosperity, while poverty and decay will pervade the country. There will spring up luxury the most unbounded, side by side with poverty the most pinching; there will exist a superfluity of wealth which cannot find employment in one class of society, and a mass of destitution that seeks in vain for work in another, while the great middle class is daily diminishing in number and declining in importance between the two extremes. In this condition of things government, even under the influence of popular institutions, yields to all the demands of the opulent class, because it gives money; it turns a deaf ear to the cries of the impoverished because they can only ask for bread. In the present arrangement of society money makes money, and poverty breeds poverty, and everything tends to make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

To the Patrons and farmers this constitution of society and this tendency to concentration of wealth presents a subject of very grave importance. It shows the necessity of a close, compact and efficient organization, such as the grange supplies, to counteract these evil influences. It presents the strongest motive for union among all classes of working men. They have the power to enforce respect for labor, to control public opinion so that it shall be embodied in wise and just legislation that will protect and advance the interests of all and not of the rich alone.

The common-sense farmer sees as clearly as others see that his manner of life heretofore has not been favorable to the development of those qualities which fit him for public stations of honor and trust. He has lived too much alone; has not mingled with others; has not enlarged his mind by reading, observation and study; has had, in fact, neither time nor means of qualifying himself to take an active and prominent part in public affairs.

EDITOR SPIRIT:—As we hardly ever see anything from this part, I will endeavor to say that we are yet alive (I mean the grange) and striving for that end which we hope will in the future reward us with peace and plenty.

We wonder and wonder again, and think and keep thinking why it is that some will say they "wouldn't join the grange," and at the same time follow us to our peaceful abode and try to listen, and watch and see what "the confounded grangers do any way?" Gate-keepers, beware. I am, fraternally, W. T. WATKINS. SIGEL, Kans., April 9, 1878.

From Prairie Valley Grange.

EDITOR SPIRIT:—We, the members of Prairie Valley grange, wishing to express our regard in relation to our beloved brothers, H. H. Hart and J. W. Hart, who are about to leave us, having recently sold their property here, and who have been members of our grange since its organization; therefore Resolved, That our grange will lose two faithful and efficient workers, that the community will miss two of its best citizens, and that we recommend them to the fraternal regard of all Patrons of Husbandry.

St. Albans Grange Store. The following letter from a Maine Patron to the Spirit is of interest:

Through the organization of our grange, some thirty of our members mustered up courage enough to start a store, of the usual variety of goods kept in country stores. We have run a little more than a year (and as hard a year as has ever been known by the present generation), and have come out so well as to renew our courage and determination to keep it going.

The Bonanza Kings. The Splendor Enthroned on Human Misery. A novel scene is now being witnessed in San Francisco. Thousands of hungry men, women and children are only saved from starvation and nakedness by the hand of charity.

There is an end to all things and especially to bonanzas. The end of those that have been so fruitful or evil here is now not far. The misery that have grown out of them will live long; some of them forever. Among the greatest of those evils is the danger to the future interests of the Pacific coast liable to result from the concentration of such large wealth in the hands of one firm, neither member of which possesses the education, character or experience for its wise administration.

The Chicago Tribune of last week says: "An immense cherry crop is in prospect for the whole Northwest. The buds are swollen and just ready to burst into bloom. It is early, very early—a full month ahead of last season—and some are predicting disaster to fruit and vegetation in general. But there are some reasons why we are disposed to think favorably of the prospect, and to believe that spring-time has come. There are no great fields of ice and snow north of us, no frost in the ground; the birds are here, and vegetation has already colored the landscape."
